TROPICAL STORM VENTS ITS FURY ON PENNSYLVANIA

Clear Sky, Balmly Temperature Follow Freakish Night

MEN HARD AT WORK Crews Making Highways In Many Sections Passable

By International News Service
Pennsylvania awoke today to clearing skies and balmly temperatures in the wake of freakish snow and thunderstorms that swept over the state last night.

Streets and roads in Western Pennsylvania, notably in the Pittsburgh area, bore mute testimony today to the fury of the tropical electrical storm which vented its wrath on that city.

Following snow flurries in the afternoon, a roaring, growling tempest broke over the smoky city last night. Two hours after the storm first let loose, streets and roads in the Pittsburgh district were transformed into miniature rivers, traffic was paralyzed as the swirling torrents of water washed earth and rocks onto the city's boulevards and a general tieup in street car traffic throughout the entire district resulted from the washing of mud and rocks onto traction lines.

Employees of the Bureau of Highways and Sewers still were at work today in their efforts to render blocked highways passable. Several automobiles were stranded, brought to a halt by huge boulders which had been forced from the hillsides and onto district boulevards by the phenomenal rain.

Outside of the city conditions were reported as bad. Allegheny River towns reported that flood conditions resulted from the driving rain. Eighteen inches of water surged through the Freeport Road at Aspinwall, penetrating floor boards of automobiles on the road and bringing fifty machines to a halt because of flooded ignition mechanisms.

Continued warm weather was predicted for Western Pennsylvania today.

HARRISBURG, Feb. 25.—(INS)—Orchardists in Central Pennsylvania were worried today over the continued stretch of warm weather. Fruit trees, encouraged by the balmy days which have extended from last Friday, are beginning to bud, and fruit growers expressed fear that freezing weather predicted as in the offing will ruin their crop. A few more days of warm weather, say the fruit men, will cause buds to reach the danger stage where they will not be able to survive the rigors of a cold spell.

The warm weather brings gladness in other quarters for it lessens the danger of an ice jam in the river. Ice has started to move and near here, the west channel was clear and the narrow eastern channel was aided by free flowing water.

The remainder of the ice is expected to move today with the river stage at 6.8 feet.

The rain which caused so much damage in the western part of the state passed over here last night without causing any great damage, but with a steady downpour which lasted throughout the greater part of the night.

Those who have been chosen to act the various characters are all well known for their ability on the amateur stage.

DOYLESTOWN NURSE ON TRIAL; SERIOUS CHARGE

Mrs. Margaret A. Sharrett Accused by Phila. Woman of Performing Operation

THE JURY IS SELECTED

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 25.—Mrs. Margaret A. Sharrett, of 'Chestnut Grove,' Doylestown, a nurse, went on trial yesterday before Judge Samuel E. Shull, of Stroudsburg, to answer a charge of performing an alleged illegal operation on Mrs. Anna Lavin, a married woman, at the Doylestown home of the defendant on October 2, last year.

In selecting the jury, William A. Gray, well known criminal lawyer, who is head counsel for Mrs. Sharrett, was assisted by State Senator Clarence J. Buckman. One woman, Mrs. Daisy B. Callanan, of Bristol, a registered nurse, was kept on the jury, while several others called were challenged.

The case is being prosecuted by District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn in Court Room No. 1. The prosecutor named in the bill of indictment is Trooper Harry Christ, of the Doylestown sub-station of State Police.

The jury: Joseph Robbins, Falls township; Harrison Shull, Plumsted township; William T. Burns, Newtown; Wilfred B. Focht, Plumsted township; William H. Cameron, Bristol township; Edward B. Search, Northampton township; Daisy B. Callanan, Bristol; Thomas H. Rodgers, Northampton township; Henry C. Raab, Hilltown township; J. Pearson Roberts, Bristol township; George Bitzer, Doylestown; Joseph M. Myers, Milford township.

Mrs. Anna Lavin, of Eddystone, a domestic in the home of a Main Line family, was the first witness called by the Commonwealth. She is the one the State charges underwent an illegal operation at the home of the defendant.

Before any testimony was offered, a lengthy side-bar discussion among counsel of both sides and the Court took place.

Judge Shull at this stage warned Mrs. Lavin that she herself in charged with conspiracy to obtain an abortion and that anything she might say in the trial of Mrs. Sharrett might be used against her. This warning was made by the Court after defense counsel had motioned the Court to do so.

The Court further informed Mrs. Lavin that she need not answer any question if she did not care to.

"Are you willing to testify in this case?" Judge Shull asked Mrs. Lavin. "No, I do not want to testify in the case," Mrs. Lavin answered.

Mr. Gray then interrogated the witness. "Do you know that what you say in this case might result in sending you to jail?" Mr. Gray asked Mrs. Lavin.

"Well, I hardly know what to say," Mrs. Lavin answered.

At this point the District Attorney asked Judge Shull to have counsel appointed to advise Mrs. Lavin before the case go any further. The Court agreed and appointed Isaac J. Vanartsdalen to represent Mrs. Lavin.

Because of personal reasons, Mr. Vanartsdalen stated, he asked the Court to be excused.

The last case for trial at the present term of Court was called before Judge Hiram H. Keller. John Albany is charged with possessing liquor at the Rose Hill Club Inn, Bensalem township.

FERRYBOAT QUITS AS BRIDGE CONTRACT IS LET

William E. Doron Says Proposed River Span Did Not Cause Him to Quit

WILL RETAIN CHARTER

The ferryboat, "William E. Doron," is lazily riding on the bosom of the quiet Delaware River at her dock here today dreaming perhaps of her last approaching rival, the Burlington-Bristol bridge. She made her last trip between Bristol and Burlington last night.

The captain of the craft, William E. Doron, sits in his office taking things easy. He has not a care in the world. He says that so far as he knows now the boat will never operate between the two towns again—that is, under his management.

On February 18th Mr. Doron, secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Burlington & Bristol Steamboat Ferry Company, gave public notice that on and after February 25th the boat would be withdrawn from service. "Decreased revenues and increased expenses," are given as the cause for the discontinuance of the service.

Whether by intent or mere coincidence it happened that on the very day that the ferry went out of service there was public announcement made that the contract had been signed for the construction and completion of the bridge between Bristol and Burlington.

Mr. Doron states that the bridge proposition does not enter into his discontinuance of service. "Increased expenses and decreased revenues," he gives as the reason.

Mr. Doron has operated the ferry for 50 years. Daily he was found on the job looking after his interest. Asked today as he sat in his office reviewing the past history of the ferry, what he thought of the bridge proposition, and how he would now keep occupied, he replied: "Oh, I have plenty to do." He refused to comment about the bridge.

Mr. Doron says that he will retain the ancient charter under which the boat was operated.

Seventy-Two Licenses Revoked; Intoxication

HARRISBURG, Feb. 25.—(INS)—Intoxication still heads the list as the cause for revocation of driving licenses. Of a total of 72 revocations for the week ending February 20th, 45 were due to intoxication. Twenty-one lost their driving cards for larceny, three for failure to stop, one for larceny and intoxication, one for intoxication and failure to stop, and one for intoxication and transporting liquor.

There were 41 suspensions during the week while 51 had their cards restored.

BURY UNIDENTIFIED BABY

The body of an unidentified still-born male child was buried here this morning, after being examined by Deputy Coroner W. Furman Young. The baby was found upon a dump near the Badger school, State Road, in Bristol Township yesterday by Asher Daniels, who resides in that vicinity.

Dream of Many Years Will Be Fulfilled With the Completion of the Span—Boon to Both Burlington and Bristol As Additional Territory Will Be Open for Development— Concrete Highways Will Mark the Approaches.

Contracts have been awarded for the building of the Burlington-Bristol bridge, and it is expected that everything will be in shape for the physical work of throwing the great span across the Delaware River from Reed street, Burlington, to Maple Beach, a short distance west of here, by April 1. Already much of the preliminary work has been done.

And when the work is started a new era will begin to dawn for Burlington and Bristol and points nearby, and a dream long dreamed by the residents of the communities affected will come true within a year.

The contract for the building of the bridge has been given to the McClintic-Marshall Company, of Pittsburgh, the largest independent fabricators and erectors of structural steel in America.

America. The company built the steel for the Panama Canal; built the international bridge at Detroit; built bridges in Rhode Island, South Carolina and other points, and even now is fabricating the great span across the Hudson River, which, when completed, will be even larger than the Delaware River Bridge between Philadelphia and Camden.

Internal Revenue Collector Announces His Schedule

INTRICATE STEPS TO BE EXECUTED BY MOTHERS

Rainbow Minstrels Give Promise of Color, Mirth and Catchy Songs

WITH SPECIAL NUMBERS

The dancing chorus mamas of the Mothers' Association Rainbow Minstrels promise some intricate and difficult steps when they give their initial performance tomorrow evening, and follow with a second presentation on Thursday night in the high school auditorium.

The rainbow colored costumes will assist with the pleasing setting for the circle and add much to the entertainment on the two nights.

A specialty number will be "The Wedding of the Painted Doll," sung by Miss Elizabeth McBrien. This number will be "illustrated" by a group of small children dressed to represent their respective parts.

Miss McBrien, who is directing the minstrels, is well pleased with the progress the women are making in their respective parts. Mrs. Marburg D. Weagley has charge of the music, and is much encouraged over the vocal numbers to be given.

The program is made up of 12 solo numbers, several duets and quartettes, besides the chorus selections. The ends have some very clever jokes and catchy songs which promise to drive dull care away.

IS IT A HOLIDAY?

By "The Stroller"

A young lady walked into a local office Tuesday morning and in her best inquisitive tone inquired:

"Is this a holiday?"

"What day is it?"

Somewhat baffled by the two questions which were propounded in rapid succession, others in the office hesitated to make reply. Then a venturesome one asked:

"Why?"

The reply of the first inquisitive individual was:

"The post office has the flag up."

Now this young lady passes in the vicinity of the post office at least 200 days out of 365 in every year and she has been doing it for the last five years. Never before had she noticed that the flag flies each day from the post office staff and that when it does fly it is no indication that it is a day of any special significance.

The Burlington-Bristol Bridge was designed by Messrs. Ash-Howard-Needles & Tammen, and they will supervise its construction.

George deBonneville Keim, president of the Burlington-Bristol Bridge Company, has arranged for the cost of the bridge to be privately financed and there will be no public offering of securities.

The McClintic-Marshall people have expressed a wish to employ as many local people as practicable on the new structure. This will be a boon to the unemployed of Burlington and Bristol.

The bridge will be built of steel and concrete and will be of modern type in every particular. Its length will be 3,144 feet, and it will have a vertical channel lift span of 540 feet, which will be 200 feet longer than any similar movable span yet constructed.

The channel span will have a maximum clearance above mean high water of sixty-four feet with the lift in its lowered position. It is estimated that under present conditions of navigation on the Delaware River in this section the lift in its lowered position will afford ample underclearance for practically all of the vessels now operating on the upper Delaware.

The channel span will be operated by powerful electric motors with great speed and offer minimum delay to highway traffic and river traffic. At its maximum height the span will offer an under-clearance of 138 feet above mean high water, which is a greater height than that afforded by the Philadelphia-Camden Bridge.

The balance of the bridge will consist of two through spans of 200 feet and two approach viaducts 1,050 feet each. The viaduct on the New Jersey side will connect with a handsome boulevard that will carry bridge traffic across the old College Farm to the Pennsylvania Railroad, and across the Pennsylvania Railroad to Washington avenue. The Boulevard will be built by the State Highway Commission. The bridge will come down to grade at Union street, which will be one of the bridge approaches.

There will be two traffic lanes on the bridge. Both will be suitably paved. There also will be a four-foot pathway for pedestrians. The bridge will extend from about the intersection of Union and Reed streets, Burlington, to a point in Bristol Township, Bucks County. On the Pennsylvania side the bridge will be connected by a concrete road leading to the Bristol pike, and by a highway direct to the centre of this borough.

The river at the point where the bridge is to be built is the narrowest for a considerable distance, and is especially well suited for the location of such a structure. The bridge will provide not only a means of quick transportation between Burlington and Bristol, but will afford a much shorter distance from Burlington and South Jersey points to Trenton. It also will facilitate seashore travel from points far north in Pennsylvania.

The new bridge will be completed and ready for opening in the spring of 1931.

The franchise for the construction of the bridge was secured from the United States authorities in Washington by Joseph R. Cheesman, president of the Enterprise Publishing Company, High and Wall streets, Burlington, and Clifford L. Anderson, burgess of Bristol.

When Joseph R. Cheesman went to Washington to secure the bridge franchise he was following an ideal rather than rising to the impulse of a

RIGHT OF PETITION

For almost 20 years John Quincy Adams fought in congress to establish the dignity and right of petition. Each year he attacked the "gag" rule which provided that any petition in any way relating to slavery or its abolition should be laid on the table without being printed or referred to committee. It was not until 1853 that he won his long and bitter fight. Thereafter petitions were duly noted in the record and referred to the proper committee.

The right of petition is carried to its logical extreme in Massachusetts, where that strange mixture of tyranny and freedom which has characterized every popular form of government presents the most instructive contrasts. In that commonwealth petitions from individuals and groups automatically become bills and claim the same right to a hearing as major legislation.

Some of the bills and petitions from citizens touch important issues, which was the motivating thought in the minds of the fathers of the Bay State constitution. But by far the great majority of them are of a petty nature undeserving of legislative consideration.

This constitutional right of petition gives the people of Massachusetts no privilege not enjoyed by the citizens of other commonwealths. Judging from the hundreds of freak bills introduced in every legislature at every session, it is not difficult for the most obscure citizen with a half-baked idea to find a sponsor among the assemblymen.

THE MUTE TAXPAYER

Governmental research by taxpayers instead of by tax spenders is essential to economical government. This is obvious from the purpose of such research, which is to ascertain the maximum amount of work that may be done by the minimum number of jobholders and at the expenditure of the minimum amount of public funds.

Government departments, bureaus and commissions want to make a good showing that their future appropriations may be large, but they must have money to make a good record. The jobholder is not to be condemned for boosting his own salary and lightening his load by encouraging creation of more jobs. Nor will one political group sincerely censure another for swelling its ranks by the spoils and patronage systems.

It is an unfortunate fact that waste, in time, money and supplies, seems greatest in municipal, county and state government. Burdensome taxation is caused by these governmental units, rather than by the federal government. Since the war, federal taxes have decreased while local and state taxation has jumped by leaps and bounds and beyond the ability of the people to pay in many cases.

There is a real need for organizations of taxpayers equipped to ferret out governmental waste and excessive taxation.

She's a good mother. She never strikes her children except in self-defense.

At least the London limitation-of-arms conference is limiting the limitations.

Mr. and Mrs. John Simons have returned to their home following a two months' stay in Philadelphia.

Miss Elizabeth Smith was a recent visitor of friends in Allen Lane, Philadelphia.

The Warner Bros. & Vitaphone production starring John Barrymore, is based on this novel.

WHEN he arrived at the gates of the Chateau, the messenger remarked with scorn on the sumptuous prospect.

"All very well," he muttered, "when one's father has been Premier General and Viceroy of Naples—oh, yes, we all know what that means."

He did not relish his errand and with a rather bitter eye viewed the obvious beauties of the scene. Glancing to left or right as he went reluctantly on his way, he saw pleasant vistas and noble alleys of an imposing park with here and there a glimpse of the smooth outlines of a classic temple or the silver jets of a stately fountain.

He was hot and tired, and his horse dropped as soon as the rein was slackened; he whistled and two tall grooms came from one of the long low wings that housed the stables.

The messenger dismounted and asked, drily, for the master of the Chateau. He added that he was expected. One of the grooms directed him

"Things look black," he admitted. "I should think they do." Colonel Pons leaned forward in some excitement. "How many are in this, eh? All the old gang, one on top of another—England, France, Spain, Holland? We hear the news here, I can tell you. General Crack is well informed; that conference in Brussels is a farce—any minute it will break up—and the Allies are ready, while you aren't. Lorraine, Hungary and Prussia—all straining at the leash, eh?"

"I've no doubt that General Crack is well informed of all that," sneered Michael Hensdorff. "He'd keep his eye on his market—but if this put bolts over he'll get scalded, like the rest of us."

"What is your offer?" asked Pons. "We may as well come to that."

"I'm not prepared to make one. Don't fly too high. Who, after all, is General Crack?"

"You know," put in Colonel Pons quietly, "that his name is worth twenty-five thousand men—raised and put into the field tomorrow—that he has Pomerania and Kurland by crooking his finger—and that to the great door at the top of the terraces, where he would find some one to attend to his business, and led away his horse.

"I am expected?"

"Yes, Monsieur, Colonel Pons waits for you."

"I do not want to see Colonel Pons. I want to see your master."

"You cannot see him, Monsieur."

Frowning with vexation, the messenger produced a letter from his pocket; it was crumpled and with dangling seals of black wax that bore imposing eagles.

To gain an entrance to the Chateau was some advantage; to satisfy the necessities of his fatigue and hunger would be another gain.

"Very well," he replied laughingly. "I will see Colonel Pons."

Colonel Pons was awaiting him and saluted him in a cordial and respectful manner.

"I am sorry," said this gentleman, "to find you off with yourself—but I set as secretary here and I shall be able to conduct your affairs."

"You are Count Michael Hensdorff, no doubt," he remarked, and the messenger said he was indeed that personage.

They sat down to table, covering by commonplace a keen scrutiny of each other.

When the cloth was drawn, To-day was placed on the table and Colonel Pons filled the two greenish glasses; Count Hensdorff had been careful how he indulged in the light German wines, but he could not refuse the Imperial vintage.

"You know from whom I come?"

"Of course—it's because of him you come from that he won't see you."

"I've orders to see him—positive orders," Colonel Pons grimaced.

"It's absolutely no use, my dear fellow!"

"He's here, I suppose, in this little paradise of his?"

"Yes."

"Well, can't you tell him—one soldier to another—"

"No, I can't. You've got to transact your business with me."

"I'm damned if I will."

"Just as you please," replied the Colonel with a slight deepening of the violet in his cheeks. "You know best what they'll say in Vienna when you tell them you wouldn't treat with me."

"They're not so desperate," declared Hensdorff sullenly.

"Oh, they aren't, aren't they?" snapped Colonel Pons. "Oh, aren't they indeed? No, I suppose not—with you sitting here, oh, of course not!"

moment. Some thirty-five years ago he was appointed one of a committee to study the bridge problem, and from that day to this his mind has been bent on the inter-city span.

Ten years ago he began a campaign of bridge education in "The Daily Enterprise." The campaign was continued day by day and eventually Mr. Cheesman had many supporters who were as enthusiastic as he in demanding a bridge across the Delaware River at this point.

And then the campaign was extended to Bristol, and the first to take it up was Burgess Anderson. It was not difficult for him to see what the span would mean to Bristol and actuated by motives of welfare he aligned himself with Mr. Cheesman, and together they fought for the building of the bridge and for the betterment of the two communities.

There were trips to Washington; trips to other places; meetings to attend; knots to unravel; papers and agreements to pass upon, and a thousand other things that needed the personal attention of the promoters. And always the Burgess was ready and willing for the work in hand.

Census Reports For Absent Families

The Fifteenth Decennial Census of the United States will be taken during the month of April. The enumeration will be made by a force of about 100,000 enumerators who will go from house to house and secure the information required for the census. Every person is to be enumerated, so far as possible, at his "usual place of abode" or the place where he usually lives. Where individual members of a family are away from home at the time the census is taken they will be reported to the enumerator by other members of the family.

For cases where it is known in advance that the whole family will be away from home at that time, special provision has been made by the director of the Census in the form of an absent family schedule which is to be filled out by some responsible member of the family in advance of the census date and transmitted to the local supervisor of the census. A copy of this schedule can be secured by application to Mr. Monroe H. Anders, at Norristown, Pa., who is the census supervisor of this district.

Families planning to be away during the month of April, leaving the home closed or with no one in charge who is qualified to give the census information to the enumerator, are urged to obtain one of these schedules at once and to fill it out and send it to Mr. Monroe H. Anders at the earliest possible date. Or if the house is left in charge of a servant who will be sure to be at home when the enumerator calls, the schedule may be left with such servant for delivery to the enumerator. The information furnished on this schedule will be treated as confidential and will be used only for the tabulation of statistics which will not reveal any information with regard to individuals or families.
